Context

For my project, I interviewed Naif Khongwong, a 24-year-old barber who runs his own barber shop at Tesco Lotus Bang Pakok. I chose this topic because I wanted to understand the daily life and work of a barber and how he treats his customers and how his work affects the people around him. I only focused on this one shop and this one barber.

Five-Layer Analysis (Onion Framework)

The surface layer, the shop itself is clean and looks trustworthy, and Naif clearly works with a high level of skill.

Moving into the process layer, he's been working as a barber for one month. His daily routine starts with waking up, showering, and eating breakfast before heading to the shop, where he cuts hair from morning until evening.

For the relationships layer, he treats every customer politely and consistently, right from the moment they walk in.

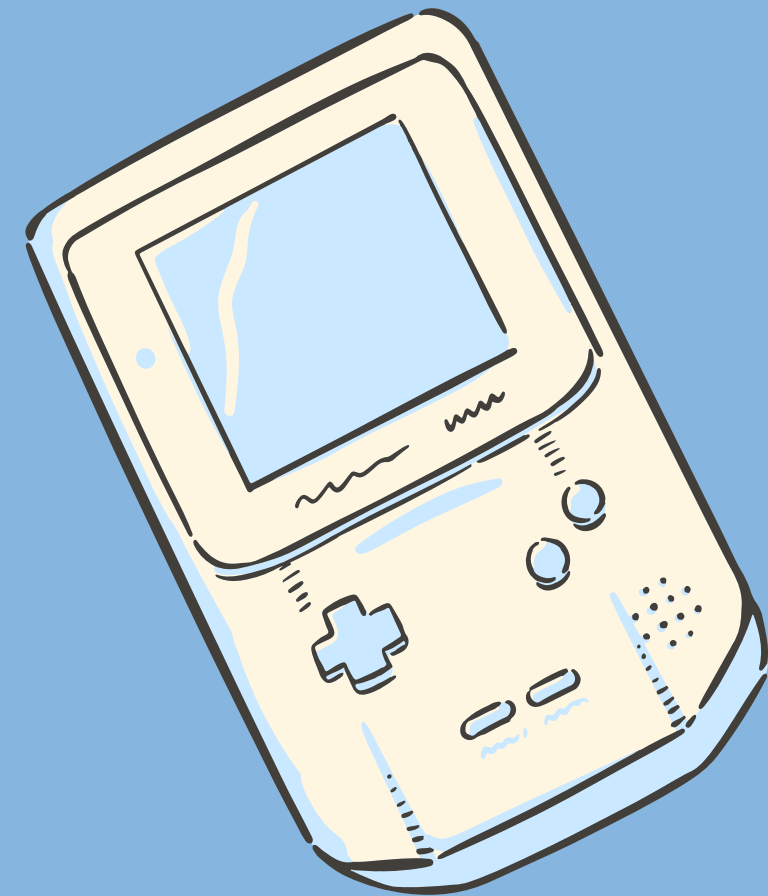

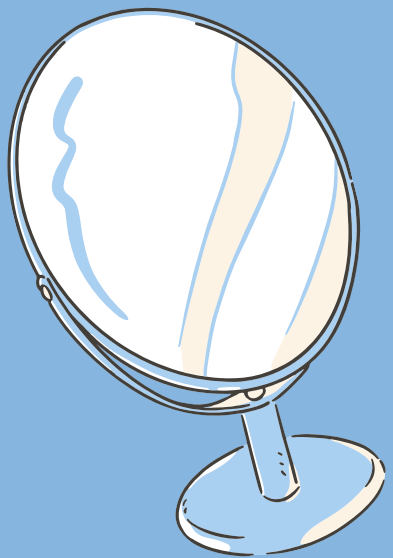

At the cultural context layer, he sees getting a haircut as something that are cleanliness a basic need for everyone which shows how essential his role is within the local community.

And at the deepest layer, value and meaning, I found that this shop actually has history. It started with his grandfather, was passed to his father, and now belongs to him. That legacy is part of why he takes his work so seriously the shop's future depends on him now."

★ Important Quotes or Stories from the Participant

"The quote that make me get interest from him is 'If a customer comes into the shop, we treat them well right from the start.' What struck me was that he didn't have to think about this it wasn't a rehearsed line, it was something he truly believes."

Discovered Beauty, Value, or Meaning

"That quote showed me something deeper than good manners it revealed a kind dedication, a sincere care for people even when they're strangers walking in for the first time. I think that's the real beauty in this story that meaningful values can be found in an ordinary job like being a barber. Through this project, I learned that be a professional isn't just about skill it's also about the mindset and care someone brings to their work every single day."
